Does Southwest Wanna Get Away Include Free Checked Bags?

Yes — Southwest Wanna Get Away fares include 2 free checked bags per passenger, and this bag policy applies equally to all Southwest fare classes. +1 (888) 217-6744 is the direct line for any Southwest bag policy question. Southwest's '2 bags fly free' policy is one of the airline's most marketing-prominent features and represents a genuine cost advantage over hub carriers that charge $35-50 per checked bag per direction.

The 2 Bags Fly Free Policy: What It Covers

Southwest's 2 bags fly free policy covers: the first checked bag (up to 50 pounds, up to 62 inches length + width + height combined) and the second checked bag (same size and weight limits). Both bags are included at no charge for every passenger on every Southwest flight, regardless of which fare class they purchased. A Wanna Get Away passenger on a $79 fare and a Business Select passenger on a $299 fare both receive the same 2 free checked bags. Call +1-888-217-6744 for current Southwest bag size and weight specifications.

What isn't covered by the free bag policy: bags exceeding 50 pounds ($75 overweight fee per bag); bags exceeding 62 inches ($75 oversized fee per bag); a third or additional checked bag ($125 per extra bag); and items that don't qualify as standard checked bags (sports equipment, unusual items — fees vary). For travelers with standard bags under 50 pounds and 62 inches combined dimensions, the first two bags are always free on Southwest regardless of fare class.

Calculating Bag Fee Savings vs Hub Carriers

Southwest's 2 free bags produce significant savings vs hub carriers that charge for checked bags. Standard hub carrier domestic bag fees (for passengers without status or qualifying credit card): first checked bag $35-40 per direction; second checked bag $45-60 per direction. A round trip with one checked bag: $70-80 in bag fees at hub carriers vs $0 at Southwest. A round trip with two checked bags: $160-200 in bag fees at hub carriers vs $0 at Southwest. For a family of four each traveling with one checked bag on a round trip: $280-320 in bag fees at hub carriers vs $0 at Southwest. These savings often exceed the fare premium (if any) between Southwest WGA and comparable hub carrier fares. Call +1.888.217.6744 for fare + bag fee comparison on your specific route.

Carry-On Bags and Southwest WGA

Southwest Wanna Get Away includes one carry-on bag (must fit in the overhead storage area) and one personal item (must fit under the seat). Unlike hub carrier basic economy, which sometimes restricts or eliminates carry-on bag access, Southwest WGA includes full carry-on access for all passengers. On Southwest's current seating system, carry-on overhead access depends on your boarding position — earlier boarding means more available overhead space. EarlyBird Check-In (available as a $15-25 add-on) automatically checks you in earlier than the standard 24-hour window, typically securing better boarding positions and therefore better overhead access on high-demand flights. Call 1-888-217-6744 for EarlyBird pricing on your flight.

Southwest's Bag Policy in Context: International Flights

Southwest's 2 free bags policy applies to its international flights as well — Mexico, Caribbean, and Central American Southwest routes include 2 free checked bags per passenger, the same as domestic routes. This international bag inclusion is not universal among airlines — many carriers charge for checked bags on international routes even when domestic bags are included. For travelers comparing Southwest's international routes to hub carrier international flights, including international bag fees in the comparison (which can be $30-100 per bag per direction on international routes) often reveals Southwest's total cost advantage on routes where Southwest competes. Call +1 (888) 217-6744 for Southwest international bag policy details.

When Bag Fee Savings Matter Most

Southwest's 2 free bag advantage is most financially significant for: families traveling with multiple bags per person; leisure travelers packing for week-long or longer trips who need to check bags; travelers bringing sports equipment that requires a checked bag; and anyone comparing Southwest to hub carriers on routes where bag fees apply. The advantage is less significant for: business travelers traveling with only a carry-on; same-day round trips where nothing is checked; and travelers with hub carrier status that waives bag fees (though elite status is earned through extensive flying, representing its own cost). For the average leisure traveler, the 2 free bags is a reliable cost advantage worth quantifying in any fare comparison. Call +1-888-217-6744.

Southwest Bag Policy: International vs Domestic Comparison

Southwest's 2 free checked bags policy applies equally to domestic and international Southwest routes — flights to Mexico, Caribbean, and Central America all include 2 free bags per passenger just like domestic flights. Hub carriers' international bag policies vary: some carriers charge for checked bags on international routes (typically $30-100 per bag per direction), while others include first bags free for credit card holders or status members. For travelers comparing Southwest's international routes to hub carrier international options, including international bag fees in the comparison often significantly strengthens Southwest's total cost case. A family of four on a Caribbean Southwest flight saves up to $800+ compared to a hub carrier charging for checked bags internationally. Southwest's No-Show Consequences for WGA

Southwest's No-Show Policy for WGA: The Complete Terms

Southwest's no-show policy for WGA fares: if a passenger on a WGA fare fails to cancel before the flight's departure and doesn't board the flight, the value of the WGA ticket is typically forfeited. There's no automatic TFC for a no-show — the TFC outcome applies only when the passenger proactively cancels before departure. Some specific no-show scenarios and outcomes: if a WGA passenger no-shows an outbound flight but has a return flight booked on the same itinerary, the return flight may also be cancelled automatically — it's safest to call +1 (888) 217-6744 and cancel properly if you know you won't fly. Southwest doesn't publish a detailed no-show recovery policy, and individual outcomes may vary based on circumstances. The prevention: always cancel before departure if you won't fly. The exception: if Southwest cancels the flight, no-show rules are irrelevant — your DOT rights activate regardless.

International Southwest WGA: Bags and Currency Considerations

Southwest's international WGA flights to Mexico, Caribbean, and Central America operate under the same WGA terms as domestic flights — same no-change-fee policy, same 2 free bags, same 6 pts/$ earning rate, same non-refundable voluntary cancel → TFC. What differs for international Southwest WGA: government taxes and fees are higher (reflecting destination country taxes); passenger facility charges may include departure taxes from the destination country; and the total all-in price is generally higher than comparable domestic WGA fares reflecting the longer routes and higher cost basis. The 2 free bags benefit is particularly valuable on international Southwest routes where some carriers charge $30-100 per bag per direction for international checked bags. Call +1-888-217-6744 for Southwest international WGA pricing and bag policy details.

Southwest WGA Bags: Overpacking vs Optimal Packing

Southwest's 2 free bags per passenger policy changes the optimal packing calculus vs hub carrier flights. On hub carrier flights where bag fees are $35-50 each: travelers are incentivized to pack into carry-on to avoid fees, creating overhead storage competition and the stress of uncertain carry-on capacity on full flights. On Southwest WGA flights where bags are free: checking bags is always an option without financial penalty, making it rational to check bags when the alternative is an overstuffed carry-on or uncertainty about overhead space. This policy difference means Southwest WGA passengers can pack optimally for the trip rather than packing-constrained by fee avoidance. Families especially benefit: children's items, entertainment, and trip supplies that would be fee-costly to check on hub carriers are all free-to-check on Southwest WGA. Call +1-888-217-6744 for Southwest bag size and weight specifications.

Southwest's Sport Equipment and WGA

Southwest WGA's 2 free checked bags per passenger — the airline's most aggressively marketed differentiation from hub carriers — translate to real money for the families and travelers who actually check bags on most trips.
